API Development

December 15 – 16, 2016

WE are glad to announce a Programme on API Development, December 15 – 16, 2016. The programme details are given below.

Introduction:

Today, all banks have networked the branches, thanks to the concept and benefits of core banking. While this networking helped the banks with internal business transactions, they couldn't reap much benefit, particularly in the areas of reporting and inter-bank business transactions. This is mainly because there was no way to define the data that is exchanged between two or more business entities. Many of our inter-bank transactions were in the coded form like SWIFT and SFMS.

The development of XML in recent years has changed the scenario now. XML allows us to define the data tags just like the way we define the data items in a database table. Today, database is at the core of any software program and it is hoped that in future XML would be at the core of any inter business transaction. While the database can be designed and developed by one alone, XML is not so as more than one party is involved.

XBRL – XML Business Reporting Language, IFX – Interactive Financial Exchange, OFX – Open Financial Exchange etc. are evolving as standards for banking and finance related business communication. RBI also is gearing up for the adoption of XBRL for business reporting. With this backdrop, IDRBT is planning to organize a three-day programme on XML technologies for Banking and Finance.

Objective:

To impart the latest know-how on inter-business communication and financial reporting based on the power of XML technologies.

Contents:

XML Evolution, XBRL, IFX, OFX, XML Editors, XML Database, XML Import/Export tools, and many more things related to XML technologies like XSD, web services, UDDI etc

Profile of Participants:

Executives of Banks, Financial Institutions and Insurance Sector.

End Use:

Participants will learn about how to interface their internal applications with external applications.
