Introduction

Most banks have attained sufficient maturity in technology adoption. Some banks have used IT in innovative ways. Now is the time to concentrate more on making IT implementation and usage more efficient and effective. This requires IT appreciation and leadership across Senior Management levels in various verticals in Banks. All the non-IT executives should be exposed to the role of IT in banks and the need for better alignment of IT objectives with business goals, to ultimately improve organisational effectiveness.

Objective

The programme seeks to prepare non-IT Executives, for effective leadership roles by providing them the much-needed insight into various facets of technology management in banks. Better alignment of technology with business goals would help in achieving corporate objectives efficiently and effectively.

Contents

- * Role of IT in Banks
- * Technology Management in Banks
- * Business-Technology Alignment
- * Security Trends in IT
- * IT Risks and Controls
- * IT Procurement Practices
- * IT Outsourcing Management
- * IT Performance Management and Measurement
- * IT Governance

End Use

Having gained a better understanding of the role of IT in Banks through this programme, the participants would be able to facilitate better alignment between IT and Business. This would make them more effective in their leadership roles.
